They're happy to do nothing (Saint Nectarios of Pentapolis)

Ξένες γλώσσες / In English

Impatience is wickedness and the opposite of the virtue of patience. People who are in thrall to it avoid any effort to do good works, any sorrow suffered for the sake of love. They always tread the primrose path of perdition and stay clear of the narrow way of virtue. They're happy, too, with doing nothing about their desires, with merely indulging them and passing their time enjoying themselves.
