We don't have the right (Saint Symeon the New Theologian)

Ξένες γλώσσες / In English

All believing Christians should be aware that Christ is in all other believers and we should have so much love for them that we'd be prepared to sacrifice our soul for their sake. We have no right to call other people bad, nor to think of them as such. Instead, we should think of them as good. If you see people troubled by the passions, don't hate them, but hate the passions that are warring against them. If you see them suffering from wicked desires, feel even more kindly towards them, in case you yourself are tempted, since you're vulnerable and prone to the entanglements of sin.
