No better than animals (Saint Nectarios of Pentapolis)

Ξένες γλώσσες / In English

Without freedom, people would be just like any other animal. We'd be subject to servitude and our thoughts would revolve in a tight circle, within which they'd be restricted. Ideas of good and evil would be beyond our ken. We wouldn't know what was shameful, wicked or false, we wouldn't have the authority to act on out own volition and so emerge from the restricted circle of our innate impulses.
